

SPLIT COMING

The Democratic Party Will Go to Pieces After the Election is Over.

SOUTHERNERS COMPLAINING

Southern Democrats are complaining that the Northern wing of the party is not carrying out its part of the agreement made before the St. Louis convention to secure the nomination of Judge Parker.

The disappointment and resentment of the Southerners bids fair to become of serious historical importance. If the Northerners do not show enough strength to make a good fight and unite the factions the control will swing back to the South and the Northern radicals.

The Democrats cheered up a trifle when D. Cody Herrick was nominated in the state of New York, but this only lasted thirty-six hours. The advantage which the Democrats have on account of the distrust in Odell at this time is more than made up by the strength of Roosevelt and the swinging strength of Republicanism in the Empire State.

All of this makes the Southerners very angry. Senators Daniel and Martin, of Virginia, called together a few days ago to find out what was being done at headquarters. They found the routine preparations for the canvass in fairly good shape, so far as they could see, but expressed their amazement because the influences which it had been claimed would be back of Parker were doing nothing.

Various explanations were given, but it did not take them long to learn that the men who were promising so much in case Parker was nominated are now doing almost nothing. The men who were clamoring for the defeat of Roosevelt are now quietly giving him assistance.

Naturally, they demanded to know the cause of this change. Perhaps they were frankly told, but if they were the writer is not informed. They made slight effort to conceal their realization that the South had been hoodwinked.

For weeks and week before the nomination agents of Parker went through the South saying that powerful interests opposed to Roosevelt (interests which had aided in the election of McKinley) had combined to defeat Roosevelt with Parker.

This meant money in profusion and influence of the most powerful kind. They were also assured that unless Parker was nominated these interests could not be depended upon.

There were a good many things about the program which the South did not like, but the State leaders submitted as a matter of experience. They saw nothing better. Also many of them felt that, win or lose, a rousing campaign with plenty of money would be a good stimulant for the party.

Now they find that they were swindled. The "powerful influences," which were to come to the aid of Parker, are not doing anything. They were dragged onto a gold platform in a way that did not suit them at St. Louis. It was a bitter dose for Tillman, Vardman, Williams and others at St. Louis to stand on the platform and quiet the angry Southerners who had been aroused by the Parker telegram.

Since then they have seen a canvass which is growing flatter and flatter and a candidate who is more timid than he was six months ago. They feel that they have sold themselves to the conservatives and got nothing.

The Hearst and Bryan Democrats of the North are feeling about the same way. Only a few of these are to be seen at headquarters and most of these are on the pay roll.

Money has been rather freely used to placate the Bryan strength. This faction is not exactly sore, but has no interest. Thousands of these are remaining with the party expecting it to fall. They will not care if it does, providing the failure is so humiliating to the conservatives that they will retire from the leadership.

Then they expect the control to swing back to the radicals. Those of the West will unite with the South and have the party for 1908.

It is true that conservatives went into power in the party organizations in the spring conventions, but very likely they could not hold their places if Parker should have an overwhelming defeat. Bryan, Hearst and others would rush for the leadership.

If there should be a strong campaign on the part of the Parker managers and some headway made, not only in securing some Northern support, but in unifying the party, then the conservatives might be able to retain their newly acquired leadership.

In this event it is expected that Hearst, Bryan and others of the radical elements will "flock by themselves" and organize a new party. This would mean that the conservatives would be left alone and run their party along lines very similar to the Republican party so far as many industrial and economical questions were concerned.

Hearst and Bryan and their followers would endeavor to occupy positions similar to the great socialistic parties which have sprung up in various European countries. They would expect supporters from the Republicans as well as the Democratic party.

Senator Bailey, who has given close attention to this interesting question from the standpoint of a Southern Democrat, thinks it inevitable that this great party of radicals will form a new party between the two parties now in existence. He thinks that the Democratic party will become more and more conservative and will not pass to the control of the radicals. (—Otto Carmichael in Chicago Commercial Tribune.)

BIG METEOR

When Hit With Hammer It Rings Like A Bell.

The sixty-ton meteorite brought by Explorer Robert E. Peary from the Arctic regions and which has lain for the last seven years in the Brooklyn navy yard, was taken today to the Museum of Natural History, Manhattan. The huge mass was carried across the river on a wrecking boat and from the dock to the museum on one of the strongest trucks ever built, and drawn by thirty-six horses.

The meteorite, which is composed of a mass of nickel, iron and carbon, is 10 feet long, 5 feet in diameter and 6 feet in height. When struck with a hammer it rings like a bell, and according to a legend of the Eskimos, it is of the female sex.

Lieutenant Peary found the meteorite at the head of Melville Bay, east of Davis strait, and brought it to this country because of its scientific value. It is one of three known to the Eskimo as the woman, the dog and the tent.

Doctrine of Compensation.

The death of Col. D. G. Colson on the 27th of September at Middlesboro was a remarkable demonstration of the doctrine of compensation, the ancient belief in, fear and worship of Mnemosis. Col. Colson was in his 44th year and a brilliant and handsome man when he was elected Col. of the 4th Ky. vol. infantry in 1898. An educated, brilliant, able, versatile gentleman, his promise was of the best. Then came the quarrel between Ethelbert Scott and himself at Aniston, Alabama, resulting in exchange of shots—then its renewal at Frankfort resulting in the death at his hands of J. A. Duncan, Alexander Julian and Lieut. Scott and the wounding of himself. Since that time and after his recovery and acquittal he had been little seen of the public but had brooded over his troubles and the imaginary danger of assassination in the town of Middlesboro. Before the war with Spain he had been prominent in all public affairs of the state and especially of his locality, he having been special pension examiner from 1882 to 1886, member of the legislature 1888-89, nominee for state treasurer 1888-89, member of congress 1897-98, and during this term was elected Colonel of the 4th Ky.

This brief resume will show he was a prominent figure and an active and a popular man. His ability was notable. But the Frankfort affray changed his character wholly, and dementia succeeded by death in the most horrible manner was the result on the 27th.

A private letter from a friend of his at Middlesboro received in this city, says: "On the evening of the 27 D. G. Colson died here. He has been very nervous since the Scott killing and all his friends thought him on the verge of insanity. He always carried two revolvers strapped to him and when in doors, night or day, locked himself in. Everybody was afraid of him. On Monday he was out driving his spirited horse, and dropped the lines and in reaching for them frightened the horse, it jumped and the Colonel fell striking his head on the dash-board. This greatly excited him and he drove to the stable, latched and went up to his flat and got a shot gun and three pistols and fired at least twenty shots into his horse's head. From that until about 11 o'clock at night he was delirious and wild, permitting no one to enter his room. Then his wife prevailed on the neighbors to permit her to go to him and she soon quieted him and he slept. Then neighbors took from him three shot guns, four pistols, two dirks and I don't know how many cartridges. Doctors worked with him for the next twenty hours working his diaphragm and injecting nitro-glycerine strichnia into his circulation, charging him with electricity but at 8 o'clock Tuesday evening he died of well marked Paralysis."
